Chapter 234: The Creation of the Overseer

Sung Jin-Woo, ever vigilant in maintaining order and ensuring the loyalty of his divine forces, realized that there was one realm that had yet to be fully overseen—the domain of the Apostles of God. While the Apostles were powerful and dedicated, he understood that their loyalty to The Twelve Divine Beings must be reinforced. To this end, Sung Jin-Woo decided to create a new clone, one tasked with overseeing this crucial domain and ensuring its stability.

1. The Creation of the Clone

Unlike the other clones, this one would be uniquely different. Sung Jin-Woo imbued this clone with only 0.00000000001% of his original power, a fraction so small it was almost imperceptible. However, even this minuscule portion of his power was enough to make the clone an S^{99999}-Rank hunter, a being whose strength was far beyond the reach of any ordinary existence in the multiverse. This made the clone equal to the highest-ranking hunters in terms of combat and influence.

Despite the diminished power, the clone retained all the necessary qualities to carry out its mission—absolute authority, divine intelligence, and an unwavering sense of duty.

2. The Clone’s Purpose and Duty

The Apostles of God had long been the first generation born from primordial light, serving as devout followers of the Twelve Divine Beings. Their power was immense, and their loyalty was unquestionable—yet Sung Jin-Woo knew that their immense strength could pose risks if left unchecked. Their reverence for the Twelve Divine Beings was vital for maintaining the balance within the Divine Triad.

The clone’s task was straightforward but critical:

Govern the Domain of the Apostles: The clone would be stationed within the domain of the Apostles of God, a realm that was both sacred and volatile. It would oversee the activities of the Apostles, ensuring that their loyalty remained steadfast and their actions aligned with the will of The Twelve Divine Beings.

Enforce Loyalty: While the Apostles’ loyalty had never faltered, Sung Jin-Woo knew that absolute vigilance was needed to maintain harmony. The clone’s presence would serve as a constant reminder to the Apostles of their purpose and their dedication to their divine masters.

Act as an Enforcer: In cases where disloyalty or deviation from their sacred duties arose, the clone had the power to act swiftly and decisively, upholding the integrity of the Apostles’ role in the multiverse.

3. The Clone’s Interaction with the Apostles

Upon creation, the clone was sent to the domain of the Apostles of God, where it immediately made its presence known. The Apostles, sensing the immense power radiating from the clone—even though it was a fraction of Sung Jin-Woo’s original strength—acknowledged its authority.

Though the Apostles had been fully dedicated and loyal to the Twelve Divine Beings, the clone’s role as an overseer served to enhance their focus. It did not need to issue commands or exert its power to maintain control. Instead, the mere presence of the clone acted as a guiding force, ensuring that the Apostles’ hearts remained aligned with their divine purpose.

4. The Clone’s Power and Influence

Despite its fraction of power, the clone’s capabilities were extraordinary. Even at S^{99999}-Rank, the clone possessed:

Absolute Authority: Any action taken by the Apostles of God would be subject to the clone’s judgment, making it the ultimate authority within the domain.

Divine Perception: The clone had the ability to perceive the thoughts and intentions of the Apostles, allowing it to detect any shifts in loyalty or intention.

Divine Control: The clone could summon divine forces to aid in maintaining the stability of the domain, ensuring that the Apostles remained vigilant in their duties.

5. The Clone’s Declaration

Upon its arrival in the domain, the clone spoke the following words to the Apostles of God, solidifying its authority:

“I am the will of Sung Jin-Woo. I have come to guide you, protect you, and ensure that your loyalty remains unwavering. You are the chosen protectors of The Twelve Divine Beings, and I shall be your constant reminder of that sacred duty.”

The Apostles, having already been devoted, felt the weight of the clone’s divine presence but were not troubled. They accepted the clone as an extension of their divine master’s will, welcoming its guidance as part of their eternal mission.

6. The Future of the Domain of Apostles of God

With the clone in place, the domain of the Apostles of God began to function with even greater efficiency and unity. The Apostles knew that their purpose was eternal, but the clone’s presence ensured that their divine calling would never be forgotten or faltered.

The clone, though powerful beyond measure, would not be a tyrant nor a ruler in the traditional sense. Its role was simply to guide, protect, and maintain the integrity of the Apostles’ sacred mission. Its existence would reinforce the divine will of Sung Jin-Woo and The Twelve Divine Beings, ensuring that the Apostles remained forever loyal.

Sung Jin-Woo, from his perch at the Umbra Citadel, observed this new development with satisfaction. His plan for balance and order was now complete, and the multiverse would continue to flourish under his divine guidance.

With the creation of this final clone, Sung Jin-Woo's influence over the Apostles of God had been secured, further strengthening his divine legacy in the ever-expanding multiverse.
